U.S. Jobless Rate Makes Biggest Drop Since '59

By Jane Scaberry and Carolyn Atkinson

WASHINGTON - The unemployment rate in the United States fell to 9.5 percent in July, the larg-est monthly decline since 1959 and the first major gain for black work-ers since the economic recovery be-

The decline in the seasonally adusted rate from 10 percent in June and a high of 10.8 percent in December was caused largely by a decrease in unemployment for vomen, whose jobless rate declined 0.7 percent to 7.9 percent, according to the Labor Department.

[President Reagan on Friday called the figures "new and dramatic evidence of the ongoing economic recovery, great news for all Americans," United Press International reported. In remarks to a group of Hispanic leaders at the White House, he noted that some parts of the nation still have very high unemployment and said, We're going to keep on with what we've been doing until we can eliminate those pockets."

The rate for black workers dropped from 20.6 percent to 19.5 percent during July. However, a government economist said that the gap between white and black yment remained large. The July unemployment rate was less than double figures for the first time in 10 months and returned to the level of June 1982. In addition, the number of people holding jobs increased by 500,000, with widespread job gains in manufacturing. construction and services, where most of the increases in jobs for chief economist for the National Association of Manufacturers.

The rate of decline in unemploy ent and the increase in jobs para lels the spurt in the expansion of the economy during the second quarter this year, economists said. Since April, administration economists have revised upward from 4.7 percent to 5.5 percent their forecast for growth in the inflation-adjusted gross national product during 1983.

GNP in the second quarter grew at an annual rate of 8.7 percent.

"The improvement in unemployment is far greater than almost all previous forecasts," said Martin Feldstein, chairman of the Council rise in the July employment level is a clear indication that economic activity in the third quarter has gotten off to a very strong start. The new figures appear to confirm that the rise in GNP this quarter can be in the same range as the second quarter's sharp growth

The number of persons unemployed for more than six months declined by 365,000 during July, the first real decline in the long term jobless group in two years, the Labor Department said. The median duration of unemployment de-clined two weeks to 9.9 weeks while the average was unchanged at 21.7

While unemployment rates for adults declined, the rate for teen agers remained unchanged, at about 23 percent, the Labor Department said. The 1.1 percentagepoint decline in the unemployment rate for black workers was the "first sign of a reduction in joblessness for this group in many months." Janet L. Nigeria Democracy Faces the Test of Civilian-Run Elections

By John de St. Jotte International Herold Tribune

LAGOS, Nigeria - All over Nigeria this weekend millions of thumbprints will be counted as black Africa's biggest, richest country puts its fledgling democracy to a test.

The contest is Nigeria's first civilian-run election since the 1960s. The army staged a coup in 1966 and turned the country back to the politicians four years ago after it held elections under a U.S.-style

The shadow of violence has never been totally absent from Nigerian elections and remains a major concern. In 1963, politically organized gangs killed scores of people during regional races in southwest Ibadan The 1979 elections brought some, but comparatively mild, disturbances. The worst violence in this year's election was on July 7, when eight persons were killed in a clash between supporters of different parties in western Nigeria. This is the moment of truth," said a Lagos University political scientist, who did not want to be named. "If this election goes well, irrespective of who wins, Nigeria will have entered a new era."

The front-runners this time are the same as four years ago. President Shehu Shagari, whose main support comes from the Hausa-Fulani group in the north, faces Oba-femi Awolowo, leader of the westem Yoruba, and Nnamdi Azikiwe, the leader of the Ibo in the east.

The minister for trade and shipping, Lalith Athulathmudali, a close associate of President Junius R. Javewardene, said the commu nal violence flared "because the ordinary Sinhalese came to believe that every Tamil who did not open his mouth to say otherwise" was supporting the terrorism.

Mr. Athulathmudali said civil servants had been slow to administer previously approved govern-ment reforms that would set up regional development councils and make Tamil a second national language, as demanded by liberation front politicians.

Both Colombo and Jaffna remained quiet Friday, Mr. Liyanage said. A nationwide curfew is to be relaxed at 6 P.M. Saturday, he said.

UN's Soldiers in Lebanon: Men Without a Mission

By J. Michael Kennedy Los Angeles Times Service

NAQOURA, Lebanou - The 5.900 United Nations troops in authern Lebanou, who oversaw a shaky peace in the years before the 1982 Israeli invasion, are men without a mission these days. The peace force, known as the UN Interior Force in Lebanon, or UNIFIL, is staffed by soldiers of 10 countries who do little more than man the checkpoints in what was once a buffer zone between the Israelis and guernillas of the Palestine Liberation Organization. On paper, the UN soldiers still have an official mission, to keep the peace in the area. Their mandate was extended for three months on July 18 by the Security Council Today, UNIFIL's problems are mainly small Israeli-backed mili-

Scientists Doubt Atom Test Caused Cancer in Veterans

New York Times Service WASHINGTON — The scientists whose studies have been cited by American military veterans to show they were harmed by atomic radiation have issued a new study that casts doubt on the thesis.

The scientists, Dr. Glyn G. Caldwell and his colleagnes at the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, reported three years ago that soldiers who participated in a 1957 nuclear test called Shot Smoky suffered an unusually high rate of leukemia.

That study has become the only scientific evidence that a particular group of veterans exposed to atomic radiation has suffered a high rate

Sanctions and Poland

The sense spreads that the West's sanctions Solidarity and came down with martial law. By against Poland belong mostly to the past. The regime has met some of the West's conditions, it is argued, formally ending martial law and releasing many prisoners, but it is not about to license a Solidarity-like trade union again. The pope has accepted a broad dialogue with Warsaw and is undertaking to funnel private West-ern aid to private Polish farms, leaving the Western nations in the position of being "more Catholic than the pope" - a Polish pope. While the United States bars Polish airliners and (in a direct blow at the Polish people's diet) Polish fishing boats, the Reagan adr tration has just agreed to expand grain sales to the Soviet Union, the source of Poland's grief.

Sanctions stay in force but movement in the most important economic area has begun. The ending of martial law cleared the atmosphere enough to enable creditor governments to agree in principle to resume talks on rescheduling Poland's huge official debt. In those talks lies the Poles' best chance to win access to credits for vitally needed spare parts and raw materials. The West has economic reasons for rescheduling; it has never considered rescheduling strictly as a favor to Warsaw.

The West went up the roller coaster with this emotional route Western governments came to pin their policy to ambitious and currently unachievable expectations for postmartial-law Polish renewal. Little thought was given to setting policy toward Warsaw in the overall context of East-West relations, with the result that the West now treats Poland worse than it treats the Soviet Union. Poland has the worst of both worlds: political restrictions from the East, economic restrictions from the West. Inevitably, the economic restrictions, although aimed at the Polish government, touch the lives of the Polish people, in whose behalf the West means to act.

The sanctions are likely gradually to come down. It is important, however, that a busi-ness-as-usual spirit not be permitted to prevail. The goal of renewal to which the sanctions were dedicated is no less worthy for being hard to reach. The laws that the regime has substituted for martial law are ugly and repressive. President Reagan is right to stress that the regime must free all political detainees and people accused of martial-law crimes. An open dialogue with the workers is the only way by which the regime can begin to earn legitimacy.

How to Help Brazil

Brazil deserves at least as much of the Reagan administration's attention as Nicaragua and more understanding. It is a dynamic country, by far the most powerful and promising in Latin America. The burden of its $90-billion foreign debt threatens its stability, the cause of democracy in South America and even the foundations of world finance.

Brazil's spectacular growth in the '70s was irresistibly tempting to foreign lenders, who fed its insatiable appetite. The military govern-ment began to retrench four years ago, but not enough. World recession, high interest rates, too-rapid expansion of state-run industries and the rise in the cost of imported oil left Brazil unable to pay its foreign obigations.

The United States and the Bank for International Settlements made emergency loans last winter, while Brazil turned to the IMF and major banks for more significant help. As it must, the IMF conditioned its loan on austerity measures, but even these proved insufficient. A pending new agreement, to inspire still more loans from banks, would require more cuts in government subsidies and sharp curtailment of the indexation of wages, which has protected workers from inflation.

All this comes at a critical time for the country's politics. The military men who have ruled Brazil since 1964 are in the process of turning power back to civilians. Too much austerity could invite unrest and cause them to change their minds. Political opponents have muted their objections to belt-tightening so as not to provoke a retreat, but there have been disquieting riots in Sao Paulo and attempts to stage a nationwide one-day strike.

There are no easy choices for helping Brazil. Default is a possibility but should be averted at all costs; it would cut Brazil off from credits and make a manageable recovery all but impossible. It could set off a chain reaction of bank failures. A repayment moratorium may be inevitable; if so, the briefer the better. The IMF proposes more stringent austerity, which is ultimately desirable if socially feasible.

The House version of the IMF funding bill urges stretching all developing nations' debts and reducing interest rates, but someone would have to pay. If it is banks, they will shy from necessary new credits; if it is IMF member countries, new funding will be hard to get. More help for Brazil is coming through faster disbursement of already approved loans by the World Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank; and the Bank for International Settlements has let its loan stand unpaid. Treasury Secretary Donald Regan says the United States propany would be more if asked, which is not much of a policy. Worldwide recovery gives the greatest rel but it will not be strong enough soon enough to avert less attractive measures. The most promising appears to be the IMF program - if the austerity does not crush the economy or political reform - plus more bank loans.

No one can be sure about the right remedies. But Brazil needs even more help than other debtors and deserves the most intensive care. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Struggling With the Dollar

The intervention in the foreign exchange markets by the central banks of Japan, the United States and West Germany to suppress the rise of the dollar is welcome but it is not the final solution to the overvalued greenback.

We urge monetary authorities to continue to make concerted efforts in the markets to bring down the value of the dollar. We are pleased that the United States participated this time. How long will the United States cooperate? But the major task for the United States is to bring down its interest rates, because this is the basic cause of the dollar's abnormal strength. - The Daily Yomiuri (Tokyo).

The intervention of the American Federal Reserve and the Japanese and West German monetary authorities to stop the rapid ascent of the dollar is long overdue. The Americans past insistence on the virtues of free market forces has meant that intervention has occurred on only two previous occasions during the tenure of the present administration, one of them being the attempted assassination of the president. Even then the intervention was not grandiose. The present departure, or rather lost art, results in part from the Williamsburg summit agreements. These were in turn based on an exhaustive exercise designed by the Europeans to prove that exchange market intervention should not necessarily be judged in narrow profit and loss terms, and might on

- The Guardian (London).

If the dollar stays expensive or rises further, it will offset the results of the French austerity plan. At present, the American recovery has no ppreciable equivalent in Europe, and the rise of the dollar has an inflationary effect.

- Les Echos (Paris).

It's like a stab in the back. The friendly old U.S. dollar is cutting up American business. U.S. manufacturers have lost from 12 percent to 25 percent of their relative price competitiveness with foreign producers because of the dollar's strength in relation to other currencies. — The Chicago Sun-Times.

A Debate on Proliferation

Until some other nation actually explodes a nuclear device, the threat of nuclear proliferation remains long-range and abstract. U.S. policymakers, while paying lip service to the need to stop the spread of nuclear weapons technology, regularly set aside anti-proliferation measures for the sake of more immediate, concrete political or diplomatic goals, True, the premise that American leverage can affect the decisions of other nations is faulty. The spread of nuclear technology has reduced U.S. influence. Pending amendments to the 1978 nonproliferation act in Congress would close some loopholes and would add a carrot to the stick by offering much more favorable terms for nuclear exports to nations accepting anti-proliferation safeguards. These changes may be useful - but what is also needed is a rethinking of the proliferation threat and possible ways to meet it. The debate of the last several years on strategic arms could be a model; it is clearly time for a similar educational process on proliferation.

Toward Economic Organization of the Pacific Basin

HONOLULU — Since Professor Kiyoshi Kokima proposed in 1967 the concept of a Pacific Free Trade Area, the notion of setting up some kind of an economic institution to embrace the whole of the Pacific basin has been on the international agenda. Rarely has a concept been so intensively and systematically canvassed for so many years with so little result. In the words of the old Chinese proverb, there has been a great deal of noise on the staircase but no one has come into the room.

At first sight, effective regional organization of Asia seems much more absurd than inevitable. After all, putting the Soviet Union aside, almost 60 percent of the population of the world lives in Asia. The task would seem just about as elusive as that attempted by the United Nations.

Asian nations' politics constitute a spectrum from Western-style democracy to military or Communist Party dictatorship. They differ in the United States or, worst of all, by both countries in concert. Would a Pacific basin organization dilute the slowly developing but important elements of economic cohesion within ASEAN?

And there is the question of Taiwan's place. Its inclusion might pose problems for relations of a Pacific basin organization and some of its members with China.

It is good to try to define an initial agenda, a mode of organization and the membership of a Pacific basin organization that might resolve or mitigate this array of problems. A Pacific basin organization would be most likely to emerge successfully by demonstrating, case by case, that it is a useful supplement to national, bilateral and existing multilateral economic relations. The way to begin is to go to work on a major problem of palpable common interest. The problem of energy supply is. I suggest, a prime candidate for an initiating role. This judgment flows from an exceedingly important fact often ignored in discussions of the future of the energy market: At this stage of their evolution, developing nations experience much higher rate of growth in energy consumption than advanced industrial countries.

History is seldom linear, but if the 1971-77 differential rates were to persist, by the year 2000 developing Asia would require 2,200 million tons of It is calculations like these that oil equivalent in energy consumption. have led the World Bank to estimate investment requirements for energy production in the developing regions as a whole at approximately $683 billion (in 1980 U.S. dollars), lifting the proportion of investment allocat ed to this purpose from 2.3 percent of GNP in 1980 to 3.2 percent in 1990.

A 1982 Asian Development Bank study on Asian energy problems, cov-ering all the ADB developing coun-tries, concludes that the average annual investment needs of energy will be more than double the 1980-1985 period. The study concludes that in most developing countries almost all the needed equipment has to be imported; and that the task of mobilizing the necessary external financial surces will require heavy support from international financial agencies.

This study also notes that many of these developing countries do not have energy supply and consumption data organized in such a way that they are amenable to economic and statistical evaluation.

These pioneering calculations suggest the order of magnitude of the task confronted in the Pacific basin if the rapidly growing countries of the region are to provide themselves, through their own resources and external assistance, with the energy base they will require if high real growth rates are to be sustained. Members of ASEAN might prepare their estimates in common and present them on a consolidated basis. The secretariat of the energy program (organized by the Asian Develonment Bank) would pull together their projections, assure their comparability and present a broad statistical picture of the region's energy problems and potentialities. On the basis of such data, responsible energy officials of the governments (as well as officials of the World Bank, the ADB and possibly the International Energy Agency) would meet and isolate certain key areas for action. The exercise as a whole would, if successful, require the governments to examine their energy prospects on a long-term basis; lead the governments to act domestically with a longer time horizon than that induced by the short-run oscillations of the international oil market; stimulate ASEAN to heighten its collective efforts in the field of energy and provide special resources for that purpose; and enlarge the flow of external capital, public and private, to expand the region's energy base. The enterprise would not, initially or perhaps ever, involve new struc-tures or institutions. The ADB could sponsor the gathering of relevant data and its secretariat could service the meetings. The World Bank and other relevant global institutions could attend and contribute. Participation within the Pacific basin would be on the basis of the interest of governments in participating.

Other candidates for this pragmatic multilateral approach are agriculture, raw material supply (including the maintenance and systematic cultivation of the forests), and trade.

But few Poles fail to see that General Jaruzelski is far from remaining what he calls "true to the spirit of the 1980 agreements" — the Gdansk accords between Solidarity and the government guaranteeing the right to strike and form independent unions. what is now called the "state of cri-

state of crisis will not be over. The new measures are guaranteed not merely to sustain it but also to bring it eventually to a breaking point. In these circumstances the apparent haste of some Western countries to lift economic sanctions and again provide the Polish government with economic aid is not only morally indecent but politically absurd. There is room for argument about whether the sanctions were wise or effective, and indeed about whether any economic sanctions can change the policies of a repressive regime. A case can be made, too, for lifting those sanctions that strike first and foremost at the Polish people rather than their rulers. But to rush in with a flood of renewed credit and other economic belp is sheer folly. It will not encourage liberalization but rather provide temporary relief to a regime bent on precipitating disaster.

Madrid in Practice? Is the refusal of accreditation by

Amnesty's Mission In response to "Amnesty International" (Letters, July 21): By politely but insistently pressuring governments and other legally established bodies in states that are found to be violating human rights, and in reference to specific prisoners or "disappeared" persons, Amnesty International tries to enforce guidelines laid down in the International Declaration of Human Rights. This method of working obviously precludes dealing with loosely ocean groups of insurgents, since there are no lines of communication. It is a fact that in Amnesty's yearly reports "unequal" treatment appears to be given to the democracies and their allies, because access to those countries is easier. The public may draw whatever inference it cares to from this fact, but it is worthy of note that Annesty is severely criticized by East bloc countries.

Despite all the criticism, thousands of Amnesty members work quietly but doggedly, within the strict limitations imposed by Amnesty International's nonpartisanship and working methods, for the enforcement of basic human rights by all governments. MARIA K. CONSTANTINIDIS. Kifissia, Greece.

Churches and Marxism

John Dart's story on the World Council of Churches (IHT, Aug. 1) says that criticism of the WCC by. Reader's Digest "relied heavily on information from the conservative Institute on Religion and Democracy for critical reports."

May I point out, as author of the Digest article on the WCC, that it was based on two months of research in four European countries and the United States. That included several days of lengthy interviews at WCC headquarters in Geneva and at the organization's New York office.

I had only two interviews with renresentatives of the Institute on Religion and Democracy. I do not conider that they unduly influenced my conclusion that, unfortunately for Christianity, the World Council of Churches has fallen prey to fashionable and often half-baked Marxism. JOSEPH A. HARRISS.

Historical Appeal Inflates Bids

By Souren Melikian

DARIS - The market recovery reflected in the rising turnover of the world's two leading auction houses has been widely publicized. Each firm has given itself a big pat on the shoulder stressing its im-proved performance and the pub-lic's "renewed confidence." The impression subtly suggested is that the clock has turned back to the rosy days of 1980-81. There is no

A glance at the celebrated successes of the year shows that the market has undergone sweeping changes, and the causes of these changes indicate that things will be vastly different in the next couple of years from what they were before the 1981-82 slump — other things being equal; that is, barring a major upheaval of the economy at large.

The first striking modification affects buying patterns, no matter what category of art is considered. Extraordinary attention is now being paid to historical significance, to the point where prices will multiply the most optimistic forecasts ree- to fourfold.

All the great surprises of the past season were caused by works of art surrounded by an aura of history. The most spectacular was the Hever Castle suit of armor made for Henry II of France, possibly by Giovanni Paolo Negroli, which was sold in May at Sotheby's for £1.925

Two considerations make this price unprecedented. First, arms and armor is a highly rarified category in which there is probably one tential buyer to every 20 or more potential buyer to every 20 or mure for Impressionist Masters of com-parable calibre. Yet, the price qua-drupled the record established in November 1981 when Ronald Lauder of New York, the leading collector in the world, had paid £418,000 at Christie's for an English suit of armor made for the Prince of Wales between 1610 and 1613. Secondly, the buyer of the Negroli suit was not a specialist. It went to Barry H. Trupin, a busi-nessman who has been buying various important works of art.

Ronald Lauder was the underbidder — understandably so; the armor he had bought 18 months earlier at a quarter of the price is, if anything, more important. It is the only documented piece from the Greenwich school. Uncommonly well preserved, it is more spectacular - the blued steel miraculously retains its lustrous peacock hue, which sets off the gilding of the chased arabesque design. If the two suits were to be weighed financially against each other, my guess is that instance, whose brilliant cataloging the English piece would rate at 50 did a lot to boost the Hewer Castle ket in such a short interval provides a unique opportunity of measuring the appreciation of historical

Thanks to a piece of historical sleuthing done by the Sotheby's expert Jonathan Bourne, it has been proved to be the cabinet delivered by the dealer Dominique Daguerre for the Cabinet du Roi - the private office of King Louis XVI — at Versailles in 1784. The king had it with him in the Palais des Tuileries in 1790. And that did the trick; The cabinet, bought by the most active buyer of French 18th-century furniture, Elizabeth Johnson, holds the world record for any piece of furniture.

The sense of history now extends not only to the great men who commissionned art but to figures who played a role in the history of art. Sotheby's phenomenal sale of the Havemeyer collection of Impressionist works in New York for a total of $15.8 million owes half its success to the name of the Havemeyers. Louisine Havemeyer, née Elder, who started building up the collection, was a friend of Mary Cassatt. The American Impressionist initiated Louisine Elder to painting as they traveled together in Europe, and took her to see her friends, the Impressionist artists. When Louisine married, she infected her husband, Horace Havemeyer, with the collecting disease. Their donation of more than 1,000 works of art to the Metropolitan Museum after her death in 1929 remains a landmark in American artistic life. And while there is little doubt to me that, "L'attente," sold for $3.74 million, is one of Degas's most moving pastels, no profes-sional thought that a pastel, howev-er beautiful, could fetch even half

Several reasons account for the new role of history as a major factor in determining the value of art. One is the development of art history itself, a relatively new field. Detailed monographs dealing with given categories of objets d'art have blossomed in the last two decades, and there has been a marked slant toward a scholarly approach. Auction rooms have taken to hiring former members of museum curatorial staffs, another new occurrence; the late John Hayward, for armor, was a former associate

Cochran, who probably saw the "Head of a Faun" mask in the 1925 exhibition, commissioned costumes, masks and stage sets by Messel for his annual revues from 1926 through 1931. In addition Messel designed masks for Eugene O'Neill's "The Great God Brown"; the costumes for Karl Vollmöller's "The Miracle" (1932); and in the same year the scenery, costumes and accessories for "Helen," an op-era bouffe based on Offenbach's "La Belle Hélène". If 1926-32 may be termed Messel's first theatrical period, 1932-39 saw his flowering as a film and ballet designer, though he by no means forsook the stage, making set designs for Ivor Novello's "Glamorous Night" in 1935; cos-tumes and sets for the London and New York productions of Wycherley's "The Country Wife" in 1936; and the sets and costumes for Ty-rone Guthrie's production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," in which Vivien Leigh played Titania,

> The major triumphs of these years, however, were the designs for the Korda films "The Private Life of Don Juan" (1934) and "The Scarlet Pimpernel" (1935), George Cukor's 1936 "Romeo and Juliet" for MGM, and "Francesca da Rimini," choreographed by Lichine for Colonel de Basil's Ballets Russes. Of this last, there are headdresses, and set and costume designs in the present show.

> Messel joined the Royal Engineers in 1940, and until the end of > the war his designing activities were much curtailed, though he managed, in periods of furlough, to create the costumes and decor for the Royal Ballet's "Comus." The Royal Ballet also got his first postwar creation, the 1946 "Sleeping Beauty." It is richly presented in the show, with designs and many of the costumes.

So closely did Messel become associated with this "Sleeping Beauty" that it is still known as the Messel production. The original, with its 208 costumes, four sets, and gauzes and drop curtains, underwent complete remakes in 1952. 1959, 1960 and 1970; in 1976 the American Ballet Theatre commissioned yet another complete equipage from Messel. Also represented in the exhibition are costumes and sets for Thorold Dickinson's film "The Queen of Spades" (1949) and Jo-seph Manckiewicz's "Suddenly Last Summer" (1960); silk brocade patterns for Sekers, the British tex-tile firm (1953); and interior deco-rations for the Dorchester Hotel (1953 and 1956), the Reader's Digest Building in Paris (1957), the Billy Rose Theater in New York (1959), the English country house Flaxley Abbey (1960-63), some assembly rooms in Georgian Bath (1963), and many houses and some public buildings in Barbados, where he went to live in 1965.

The one sadness of this exhibition is that it is not taking place in Messel's lifetime. It was to have been the 1975 opening show of the theater museum in its own premises in Covent Garden, but the government has repeatedly reneged on its promise to finance the new museum. Meanwhile, the Victoria & Albert gives shelter to the theater museum's vast collections, but three exhibition rooms and a suite of offices is patently inadequate.

Urbino, a small jewel of the Renaissance frequently dangled be-side the bigger one of Florence, is as smooth and peaceful as Florence is craggy and intimidating. The massive grey stones, the basic architectural unit of Florence, are replaced here by small, pinkish bricks. They flow into an endless shell of serenity, relatively undis-turbed by the outside world and unseen by most of its travelers.
Yet Urbino is only four hours by car from Rome, three hours from Venice and one and a half hours from Bologna. The most beautiful — and difficult — approach is through the Appenines from Florence in three hours of breathtaking hairpin turns. The connecting train station closest to Urbino is Pesaro prefaced by a tour around the town. Urbino still has its ramparts, fortified by Federigo, Duke of Montefeitro, in the early 15th century. Having secured the town's defense, he went on to build the palace, an art collection and the finest library of the early Renais-sance. A missing eye and a broken nose were testimony to his skills as a warrior. When asked the secret of his exemplary rule, Federigo re-plied: "Essere umano" — to be hu-

The dark-eyed Fornarina fascinates because of her suspected link to Raphael's premature death and sources of the time, to the excesses of love. The artist, reluctant to confide in his doctors, let them bleed him, as they believed he was suffering from heat prostration. He died, as he had been born, on Good Friday, at age 37.

Any new footnote to the dense scholarship on the Fornarina is of interest. The contribution of this exhibit is the first scientific analysis of the painting by the Florentine laboratory that held Botticelli's "Primavera" up to the light of modern science. Through radiology, the underlying sketch of the Fornarina shows a decorative armband reading Raphael Urbs, a con-traction of the Raphael Urbinas seen in the top painting. A mountain and river landscape reminiscent of Leonardo is covered up with thick foliage. Most mysterious are the fingerprints, well pressed in the paint and apparent through radiology on the top part of the canvas. Are they Raphael's, a collaborator's or perhaps those of the delectable Fornarina herself?

Arts Festival Transforms Dusty Moroccan Village On his return to Asilah, Benaissa was even By Pranay Gupte improve roads, sanitation and power in Asilah.

ASILAH, Morocco — This is a village of whitewalled houses and sandy beaches that are usually carpeted with fishermen's nets, a picturebook community situated where the Mediterranean meets the Atlantic. The homes all have electricity, the narrow cobbled streets are kept clean by diligent sanitation crews, there is virtually no unemployment and no crime, and Asilah rarely runs out of drinking water. Asilah has also become what is perhaps the Third World's leading cultural mecca.

The man who made all this possible in the space of less than five years is Mohammed Benaissa, a young filmmaker who was born in Asilah, left it some years ago in frustration, then decided to return and transform a dusty, povera sudden. Asilah finds itself enjoying the status of a "model village" not only in Morocco but by reputation through much of the developing world. In August each year, it hosts the Asilah Cultural Festival, which attracts artists, artisans, singers, sculptors, musicians, poets, writers, politicians, professors, scientists, filmmakers. economists and other experts.

The roads were pocked with canyons that masqueraded as potholes. There was seldom any electricity. Potable water had to be brought from deep wells many miles away. No economic aid was forthcoming from the administration of King Hassan II, despite repeated pleas from Asilah officials.

One day, walking through Asilah's clamorous bazaar, Benaissa had an idea: Why not invite to Asilah his friends from various cultural communities around the world? He decided to organize a summer music festival and request his fellow villagers to clean up the community in preparation. Perhaps, he thought, if a sufficient number ty-ridden village into a prosperous place. Underlying Strength of Dollar Leaves Little Room for Effective Intervention

WASHINGTON — This week's surprise intervention by the United States and four of its allies in the foreign exchange markets, designed to halt the spectacular rise in the international value of the dollar, revived an old and bitter debate:

Is there really anything that governments can — or should — do to change the fluctuating levels of one currency against another?

From the first day that the Reagan administration took office, it made good on its well-known hands-off ideology. It would no longer follow the Carter administration pattern of being ready to jump into the markets to prop up or hold back the dollar. West Europeans, who used to argue that the United States was following a policy of "bernign neglect" when the dollar plunged in value in 1978 and 1979, felt equally aggregated when the dollar in 1991. aggrieved when the dollar in 1981 began to soar to new highs, ever though their exports to the United States should have been greatly stimulated by cheaper marks, francs, and so on.

that the dollar is seriously "over-valued," resulting in a widening of the U.S. trade deficit, and negating their efforts — vis-a-vis the Japanese — to produce better quality goods at a competitive price.

There can be little doubt that the extraordinary high level of the dollar is contributing to and fomenting a virulent degree of protectionism. Many whose mistincts run to the "free trade" side have nevertheless looked for relations and formal trade of the side have nevertheless. looked for palatable means of reining the dollar in, considering that the lesser of economic evils, when measured against the devastating effects of quotas, high tariffs, and other restrictions on trade.

Yet, there is an unresolved question as to whether the dollar is 20 to 30 percent "over-valued" - as experts such as former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury C. Fred Bergsten insist —or whether (unfortunate as it may be) the high level of the dollar reflects conditions in the world as they

In that case, the only way in which the dollar is going to change is if the

Strong Dollar Likely to Continue

The further rise of the dollar this year, in the face of record U.S. budget, trade and current account deficits, is really a remarkable story. From January through this week, according to Morgan Guaranty Trust, the bir inches of the dealer of the d

It is not difficult to see why the dollar has become so strong, and all the reasons for its strength suggest that the pattern will continue, and that intervention can have only a small impact, if any.

Interest rates in the United States are high, and may go higher. Yet, inflation rates have come down dramatically, productivity is increasing, and the service and high-technology industries promise a reasonable economic growth rate and a net increment in jobs for the next few years. By contrast, the recovery in Western Europe will lag behind.

Thus, investments are attracted to the United States from all over the world, especially when the American continent, protected by two large oceans, seems a "safe haven," given increased political and economic tensions elsewhere.

As Rimmer de Vries of Morgan Guaranty Trust says, the markets had better get used to a strong dollar for a long time. So long as the budget deficit continues at or near the $200-billion level, interest rates will stay high. And so long as interest rates stay high, and the United States is free of the kind of political and strategic worries that plague Western Europe, the dollar is likely to stay high.

Does that mean there is no role for intervention? Mr. Bergsten, who helped manage an active intervention policy in the Carter administration, as well as Fed Reserve Chairman Paul A. Volcker, believes that speculative fever can be reduced if traders know that governments can come in and temporarily put a damper on things.

In effect, that is what the Reagan administration reluctantly undertook to do this week, responding to the Williamsburg Summit commitment to cooperate more fully in this year.

:::::c _ ::=::: Small interventions now and then should never have been discarded as Reagan administration will now, from time to time, go back into the markets to do just that.

But a more important priority should be reduction of the huge budget deficits that the Reagan administration has helped create, so that interest

The second priority should be to give some real meaning to that "convergence" pledge at Williamsburg, especially in terms of U.S.-Japanese fiscal policies — ours should tighten up, the Japanese should loosen up. That will help both the United States and Japan to get a more sensible dollar-yen exchaange rate. To be sure, it will do little for the malaise in Western Europe, which may be in a hopeless, long-term

Changes in Middle East Worry Labor-Exporting Asian Nations

By John Laird

BANGKOK -- They can be seen in their brightly colored company shirts and caps lining up at airport departure lounges in Bangkok, Manila and major cines of India, Pakistan and Bangladesh. At the Saudi Arabian Embassy in Bangkok, they pack the 10th floor corridors and squat in the reception area by the score, seeking work vises.

They are migrant workers, off to the Middle East by the hundreds of thousands from Asia's developing countries. They will spend one year, two years or more away from their families.

They will live in unfamiliar cultures, but they are eager for big money and a brighter future.

Their earnings significantly bolster sagging economies at one, and in some cases are the major source of revenue for the poorest, most heavily populated labor-exporting countries.

But now, five years after the start of the Middle East spending boom, labor officials are cautioning that the recent dip in oil revenues coupled with new domestic goals in the Middle East are in turn altering the demand for labor.

The Philippine labor minister, Blas F. Ople, toured the Middle East earlier this year and passed through Bangkok with news that throughout the Gulf and in Jordan and Iraq, governments were substantially cutting back their development pro-Mr. Ople told a gathering of officials that Bahrain had announced a budget cut of 50 percent, with the United Arab Emirates expecting a similar cut. Iraq, he said, is strapped for cash because of its war with Iran.

So far, only Saudi Arabia — the major importer of labor — has still been riding high with its third development plan, 1980-85, calling for $300 billion in expenditures for a wide range of projects, Mr.

But in Saudi Arabia, experts are also observing a slowdown, especially in construction, as the development plan nears completion and oil revenues

Mr. Ople, noting that demand in the construc-tion industry had peaked in Saudi Arabia, predict-ed that labor requirements would shift there to-ward heavy and light industries, agriculture and mining. He also anticipated a different mix of nationalities among the migrant work force.

"I believe that there should be a closer cooperation among the labor-sending countries in East Asia so that we avert a kind of price war in the field of manpower which could be very deleterious to our own national interests," Mr. Ople told the gathering.

He noted that South Korea, Thailand and to a lesser extent the Philippines were prime suppliers of labor in the construction industry. An official of the International Labor Organiza-

Sweden's Kemanobel Begins Talks On Sale of PVC, Polyethylene Plants

STOCKHOLM (Reuters) — Kemanobel, Sweden's largest chemical company, said Friday that it has begun negotiations with Norsk Hydro of Norway and Neste, Finland's state oil company, on the sale of its PVC

Noway and Neste, Finand's state oil company, on the sale of its PVC and polyethylene plants on the Swedish west coast.

Kemanobel said that it had agreed with its U.S. partner, Union Carbide, on negotiations to sell Uniofos Kemi, the largest polyethylene producer in the Nordic countries, to Neste. Sales of Unifos Kemi, which holds the license for Union Carbide's process for producing low-pressure polyethylene, were 1.1 billion kronor ($140.8 million) in 1982. Kemanobel did not give the price of the divestiture.

Kemanobel also said that the sale of its PVC operations to Norsk Hydro would permit a substantial reduction in Kemanobel's involvement Hydro would permit a supstantial reduction in Kemanocer's involvement in the petrochemical industry. Negotiations on the purchase of the Kemanord Plast subsidiary had begun. The unit, with a PVC plant at Stenungsund, had 1982 sales of 550 million kronor.

Hydro — Norway's largest company with sales of 13.7 billion kroner ($1.84 billion) in the 1983 first half — has developed a major petrochemical industry in Norway with PVC as its primary product.

W. German Living Cost Rises 0.4%

WIESBADEN, West Germany (Reuters) — The West German cost-of-living index rose 0.4 percent in the month to mid-July after a 0.4-percent increase in the previous mouth, the Statistics Office reported Friday. The index stands 2.5 percent higher than its level a year ago after a year-on-year increase of 2.4 percent in June.

In Essen, the Rhine-Westphalia Economic Research Institute said that the country's real gross national product will grow next year by no more than 2 percent and most likely by less, and that unemployment will average 2.5 million persons. (The government last month forecast a real GNP growth of 2.5 percent in 1984).

The institute of the Government last month forecast a real country in the country of the country in the country of the country in the coun

The institute, one of West Germany's five leading economic research bodies, called the government's economic policies since taking office in March "more a patchwork than a change" and said that Bonn had not then started to make spending cuts needed to cut the budget deficit and case industry tax burdens.

Seoul, Jakarta to Sign LNG Pact SEOUL (Reuters) — Officials of the South Korean Energy Ministry said Friday that the state-run Korea Electric Power Corp. will sign a contract with Indonesia's state oil company, Pertamina, to import two million metric tons of liquefied natural gas for 20 years from 1987. The contract, which took more than two years to negotiate, will be signed next Friday in Jakarta, they added.

Meanwhile, Abn Dhabi and Qatar have told Japanese gas importers their LNG prices have been cut to $270 a metric ton, retroactive from Monday, following Saudi Arabia's recent price cut, industry sources said in Tokyo. Abu Dhabi had charged $283 and Qatar $280.

Lisbon Discusses New BIS Gold Swap

LISBON (Reuters) - Portugal is negotating a further gold-backed loan, for $300 million, with the Swiss-based Bank for International Settlements. This would bring gold-linked loans this year to $1 billion, after a gold deposit in March of $400 million and a swap in June of $300

Government sources said Friday that loans were necessary to service debts contracted beween 1980 and 1982 by public companies gnaranteed by the central Bank of Portugal. Political uncertainty and the delays in negotiating the $300-million loan led to severe liquidity problems for the Bank of Portugal earlier this year.

Bonn Defies EC on Beer Imports

BONN (AP) - Despite European Community pressure, West Germany reaffirmed its opposition Friday to imported beer that does not meet the national "purity law." Health Minister Heiner Geissler, citing health reasons, said: "Sale of beer which consists of ingredients other than malt, hops, yeast and water will not be allowed in West Germany." The European Community's executive council has announced plans to investigate the import ban, which it considers an uniawful infringment on the community's free-trade rules. Some non-German beers are brewed From substances other than malt and use chemical preservatives.

Mattel Trimming Headquarters Staff

NEW YORK (NYT) - Mattel is planning to lay off 400 more whitecollar employees at its Hawthorne, California, headquarters, and a spokesman indicated on Thursday that the company was considering whether to discontinue marketing its sole acceptance of the method.

Last week, Mattel said it would report a pretax loss of "significantly more than $100 million" for the first half of 1983. Analysts have termed the company one of the more serious casualties in the war for video game

Because Mattel's only home computer, the Aquarius, was a late entry in the home computer market, speculation in the industry increased Thursday that the company was simply moving to cut its losses. However, a Mattel spokesman said, "We are currently assessing the extent to which we will support this category [home computer efforts] over the long term," he said.

Iacocca Is Seeking to Delay Offering of Chrysler Warrants

By John Holusha New York Times Service HIGHLAND PARK, Michigan

- Chrysler Corp. will ask the U.S. ernment to postpone the sale of the 14.4 million Chrysler stock warrants until a congressional review of the matter can be sought, the company's chairman, Lee A. Iacocca, said Thursday.

Secretary of the Treasury Donald T. Regan Regan announced last week that the government decided to sell the warrants to the public through an underwritten offering. Mr. Iacocca said Chrysler offered on July 13, the day he announced the loans would be repaid, to buy back the warrants for just over $17 each, or a total of $250 million. He suggested that the gov-ernment's decision to seek what he termed a speculative profit stemmed from hostility toward him and Chrysler.

During an interview at Chrys-ler's headquarters here, a visibly disturbed Mr. Iacocca said the sale would violate the intent of Congress when it wrote the loan guar-

He said the sale of the warrants would depress Chrysler stock until 1990, when they expire, even though the government's risk is about to end with the repayment of the guaranteed loans.

Each warrant can be converted into one share of Chrysler stock at $13. The current trading price is about double that.

"It doesn't meet the test of fairness, or even decency," Mr. Iacocca "You can argue about the technicalities, but the operative line is that when you pay back a loan of that size seven years ahead of schedule, you often renegotiate the terms because there is no more risk

"I've dealt with an administration and people representing that administration who ideolgically didn't like our deal," Mr. Iacocca said. "And now that we've succeeded, we're the source of some bewilderment — if not embarrassment - and I've gotten the feeling that they just wish I'd go away and

TOKYO - The continued decline in the value of the yen is hindering Japan's goal to double its foreign aid by 1985, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said Friday.

The pledge to double aid from the $10.7 billion made available in 1976-80 to at least $21 billion in 1981-85 was made in January 1981 by then Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki. The pledge was reiterated in economic summits in Ottawa in 1981 and Versailles in 1982.

However, the spokesman said, the weakening of the Japanese yen and a general delay in contributions to multilateral agencies have made it unlikely Japan will be able to keep its

The value of the yen dropped from an average 220 yen per dollar in 1981 to 240 yen per dollar in 1982, the spokesman said. Although the yen value of Japanese aid increased during these years, he said, it declined when converted into dollars.

not living up to the highest standards of mothering. Although mothering is important, particularly during the child's early years, Dally argues that it does not have to be provided solely by mothers. Instead she presents a convincing case for the importance of exposing young children regularly to a variety of care-givers — fathers, babysitters, daycare teachers - any of whom may be motherly.

Yet we persist in our notions that, first, mother hood is a special and exclusive relationship which can exist only between a woman and her young and, second, that any job or condition, however neces sary, which interrupts that relationship is artificial and harmful. Drawing on the work of social historians such as Lawrence Stone and Phillippe Atimes, Dally demonstrates that these notions of motherhood are not only irrelevant, but outdated - prodnots largely of notions which appeared in the West about 200 years ago but are, historically speaking.

Today's ideals of motherhood and childhood those promoted by conservative politicians, woonen's magazines and books on child care, developed alongside European romanticism. In the late 18th and early 19th century, as romanticism biossomed so did the idea of childhood as a special time, a circumscribed idyll. Naturally, the role of the mother as principal moral influence and architect of the child's character and well-being achieved new prominence. All of which made motherhood ripe for the interpretations of Frendian psychology so (2shionable in this century.

Having more than one "mother" figure early in life is actually beneficial to the child, says Dally, and learning to cope with a mother's absence can build a young person's confidence. She points out that in England before World War II, it was difficult to England before World War II, it was difficult to find a middle- or upper-class adult who had been reared exclusively by his mother, so common were servants, particularly the ubiquitous British namy, and the custom of sending boys off to boarding school at the tender age of 8. Even though that system, as Dally points out, "produces its own ms and neuroses . . . it is probably one of the best training grounds not only for leadership but also for learning to cope with extreme situations."

Dally argues persuasively for changes in our attidow them with more real status than they now enjoy. She would have them both released from the contines of the nursery. Mothers should be encourcontines of the nursery. Mothers should be encouraged to regain the productive roles they once held, although those roles have changed radically now that spinning wheels and cheese presses are gone and the home is no longer a center for productivity. And although Dally never argues for returning children to the productive roles they played before the advent of child labor laws, she does maintain that children should be recognized as individuals canable of independence and responsibility. capable of independence and responsibility.

Change never comes easily, especially where families are concerned. But women are changing, and today's young women who do not yet have children seem much less likely to let themselves be trapped in the myth of ideal motherhood. In "Inventing Motherhood" Ann Dally provides some signposts which should help them on their way, and she offers much that is provocative and worthy of consideration for all parents, present and future.

Purchase of Texas Cas By CSX Is Approved

WASHINGTON — A U.S. appeals court Thursday cleared the way for a $1.07 billion takeover by the CSX Corp. of Texas Gas Re-sources Corp. The court order said CSX could begin acquiring stock in Texas Gas Friday evening.

The court rejected arguments by the barge industry, which had claimed the takeover had antitrust implications because Texas Gas owns a barge company. Stock in the barge line will temporarily be

Classing-Up Cactus Juice

By Soll Sussman The Associated Press

TEQUILA, Mexico - The folks who produce a potent drink from cactus juice are trying to do something about their image. Tequila is having an identity crisis.

We have only ourselves to blame," said J. Ramon Yanez Mutio, director of the Tequila Industry Regional Chamber of Commerce. We're almost ready to start an institutional campaign to dignify

Tequila-makers say their product has suffered from tales of lost souls who quaff the stuff straight with lemon and salt - and wake up the next morning wishing they

That image is too tough, the producers say, maintaining that tequi-la is a sophisticated beverage.

"We're not in that era of the macho Mexican anymore," said Roberto Rosales, production chief at the José Cuervo distillery in Tequila, a town of 25,000 in central Mexico. "We're almost on a level with a brandy."

Mexico consumes 6.3 million gallons annually, the United States 5 million gallons and the rest of the world 1.3 million gallons, Yanez Mutio said. He said the sales growth that took off in the 1960s with the expansion of the U.S. export market was continuing, "but

Tequila distillers have started individual campaigns to sell their product to a more sophisticated market

An advertisement for Sauza's top of the line, Commemorativo, shows a man in coat and tie savoring his drink in front of an ornately carved wooden bar well stocked with imported whiskeys and liqueurs. José Cuervo promotes a mixed drink called the "Vampire with tequila, the popular "sanorange juice, salt and lime.

The town of Tequila has the largest concentration of tequila distilleries in Mexico: at least 13. No one is certain if the town gave the name open and cook it to form a sugary liquid. They sampled the liquid and found it to be a tasty liquor.

 A mural at the Sauza distillery, which along with Chervo is a giant of the industry, shows a history of tequila starting with the lightning bolt and ending with a near-orgiastic scene of outdoor revelry.

Diana Kennedy, in her encyclo-pedic "The Cuisines of Mexico," writes that it generally is believed that tequils was not distilled until the middle of the 18th century.

Most regions of Mexico have their distinctive liquors. The best known other than tequils is mezcal from the southern state of Oaxaca. which comes with a worm at the bottom of the bottle. Tradition has it that by the time you finish the bottle you don't care if you eat the

By government regulation, tequi-la can be distilled only in the Jalisco state surrounding Tequila, from the blue agave cactus grown there. The cactus has distinctive, spearlike leaves that jut up in the shape of a crown. Fields of it flank the roads leading to Tequila.

Rosales, at Cuervo, said the blue agave takes uine to 12 years to reach maturity. The cactus changes in character if grown elsewhere and cannot be used to make tequila, he said. The leaves are stripped from the cactus, leaving only the pineap-ple-like hearts, which are tossed into ovens and at Cuervo are cooked for 66 hours.

A sweet, but slightly acrid smell from the fermentation pervades the distilleries.

The softened cactus hearts are taken to mills and cut into pieces to make it easier for the juices to be extracted. The mixture is homogenized and fermented in vats before

The storage area at Cnervo can hold 400,000 gailons (1.5 million liters) of tequila and smells more like the final product. The warehouses are stocked with barrels as the alcohol ages to produce a variety of brands. White tequila stands for at least 15 days. "Especial" stands at least one year to become a darker liquid, "Centenario" for two

Gripes of Wrath

Some Go to Salinas to Honor John Steinbeck But Many of the Residents Hate Him

By Robert Lindsey New York Times Service

SALINAS, California — They came to Salinas this week to honor John Steinbeck, a native son who won the Nobel Prize yet who is still scorned 15 years after his death by much of America's literary establishment and many of the people in the town that he

By Aug. 10, when the fourth annual Steinbeck Festival ends, more than 3,000 people are ex-pected to have visited a retrospective look at one of America's best-known authors, one whom critics have often dismissed as shallow and overly sentimental.

The program includes screenmgs of the motion pictures made from his books, including "The Grapes of Wrath," "Cannery Row" and "East of Eden"; schol arly analyses of his writings; and walks and bus rides through the neighborhoods of Monterey and the lettuce fields of the Salinas Valley that he haunted as a child and young man and used as a stage for his stories. Salinas is 100 miles (160 kilometers) south of San Francisco and about 20 miles from the Pacific Ocean.

Bowen came by private plane from Los Angeles because, Beck-with said, "we love the way he wrote." Nancy Mills of San Diego said she was a Steinbeck fan because he sees deep into human nature, human character."

Professor Shigeharu Yano said he came in order to better understand the man he teaches about at and they made us read him. It was Reitaku University in Japan, where he said Steinbeck had supplanted Ernest Hemingway and William Fanikner as the most widely read American author. Some of the impoverished

Yet some things have not changed. To many people here, John Steinbeck still arouses deep passions as the local boy who betrayed his class and became a "communist" who championed the migrant worker while expropriating the personas of his neighbors and defaming them in his books.

"A lot of people thought they saw themselves in his books, but I think John created the people to fit what he wanted," said Alita Hawley, a grammar school classmate of the author who, at 79, is blind and confined to a wheelchair but possesses a richly detailed memory of the Salinas Val-ley that Steinbeck chronicled. "He was very much of a loner, an observer." she said. Pauline Pearson, who moved to Salinas with her parents from Oklahoma in 1938, has made it a personal project to tape-record the memories of more than 200 people who knew Steinbeck and lived in his era. "Anybody in Salinas who had anything to do with a union and wanted to pay more than 25 cents an hour for a farm Gloria Beckwith and Vivian worker was considered a Communist," she said.

"When I was growing up in Brooklyn, all of our teachers were Jewish, and a lot of them were liberals," said Gordon D. Joblon. who left a senior job on Wall Street and moved to Salinas three years ago. "They thought Stein-beck was Jewish and a liberal, the first time I'd ever read a book that worked on more than one level, and I loved him."

Joblon is president of the Friends of the John Steinbeck Library, which stages the festival, "Okies" whose plight Steinbeck and immediately upon his elec-wrote about in "The Grapes of tion found himself in battle with Wrath" have their own huge residents who did not want to

Censorship Row

CALINAS, California - Fans of the novelist John Steinbeck who arrived here for the fourth annual Steinbeck Festival were surprised to learn that Viking Press had delayed publication of a long-awaited authorized biography of the novelist. The reason, according to the book's writer, is that Viking bowed to pressure from Stein-beck's family and required him to delete material objectionable to the family.

"Viking told me unless I went along with these things, there was the possibility of a lawsuit, and if I didn't go along with the recommendations of Viking's lawyers, they wouldn't defend me," said the writer,

The initial release of "The True Adventures of John Steinbeck Writer," upon which Benson had worked for 15 years, was scheduled to have been the high point of the festival. Viking now kays it hopes to get the book out by mid-September. Neither Benson nor Viking officials would disclose the spe passages that were deleted or revised. Others familiar with the manuscript said most of the changes involved the depiction of Steinbeck's sons and their mother, the late Gwendolyn Conger, an aspiring actress who was the second of Steinbeck's three wives. living Goodman, president of Viking Press, confirmed in a telephone interview that the Steinbeck estate, through an agent, had

The five-week summer company's prospectus, registered was identified as Richard McCallister, a graduate student. Carol Salazar, also a teaching assistant in the university's Spanish department, said McCallister had "had a lot of complaints about the department, and run-ins with several of the professors." After final grades were given out McCallister's supervisor, Al L per, noticed the preponderance of A's. Cooper regraded the final examination papers and awarded new grades to McCallister's students: six A's, eight B's, two Cs, one D and es, said José M. > Robert Redford is in Buffalo, New York, to play an aging baseball player in the film "The Natural." He says he's a natural for the role: "It's a sport I loved as a kid. Sure, I can identify with the character. I'm too old to be playing baseball. The me-ter's ticking away." Redford, who will turn 47 this month, and who has stayed away from acting for two years, said he signed for The Natural" because it would be a chance to work with Robert Duvall, who plays a sportswriter in the film.

When the cameras roll on the movie "Star Trek III: The Search for Spock," William Shatner will command the star ship Enterprise, but Leonard Nimoy will be the boss: Nimoy will direct the film. Whether he also will appear as Mr. Spock, who died at the end of the last "Star Trek" film, remains a mystery. Executive producer Have Bennett said. A woman who hid $8,000 worth of jewels in one of her son's jigsawpuzzle boxes discovered he had given the game to a charity and the charity threw it away, Kathryn Kay Delk of Longwood, Florida, said she hid the jewels in the box before she left town on a trip last month. "I figured if someone broke in, they'd never look through the puzzle boxes," said Delk. a computer science teacher at Seminole Community College. When she got home, she told her 7-year-old su Travis, to sort through his toys and add those he didn't want to the items she was donating to Goodwill Services - and she forgot to remove her jewelry. When she realized the loss, she contacted Goodwill supervisors.
